

A Little Job for You

مدارج

Shared reading · Birth to two

Before lunch,
the table was empty.

Dad set down the plates.

Mum, Dad's wife, set down the cups.

One light napkin was left.
“A little job for you,” said Dad.

He brought the napkin close and helped me hold it.
I put it beside my plate.

A plate from Dad. A cup from Mum.
A napkin from me. Our jobs were different,
and the table was ready.

An original fictional read-aloud. The full text is aimed around 18–24 months within the birth-to-two stage.

Choose one light, safe object, such as a cloth napkin, with direct help and supervision. Keep hot food, glass and sharp objects away. Different small jobs can complete a shared scene without ranking the people who do them.
