The Napkin Arrived

Shared reading · Birth to two

A drop of water fell on the table.

“I need the napkin,”
said Dad.

The napkin was near me.
I reached, but it was a little too far away.

Dad moved it closer.

I picked it up
and passed it to him.

Dad wiped away the drop.
“The napkin arrived,” he said.
It was a small job, and it helped.

An original fictional read-aloud. The full text is aimed around 18–24 months within the birth-to-two stage.

Place a clean, light cloth napkin within reach, with direct help and supervision. Do not offer cleaner or glass, or ask your child to reach towards an edge or a high surface. Joining in is a gentle invitation, not a test.
